The challenge

Understanding how to build TRUST and CONFIDENCE among the attractions-visiting public

Helping us to get back on our feet quickly but also to sustain our recovery

Two major practical questions attractions likely to have ahead of re-opening:

- 🕒 How should we physically present ourselves on re-opening to build public trust and confidence in visiting?
- 🕒 What communications messages should we put out there to build confidence and capture the public mood?

How are we generating insights to meet this challenge?

Periodic waves of online research among representative samples of the attractions-visiting public:

How is the public feeling about visiting attractions?

After mid-May's dip following the initial lockdown easing, national optimism has steadily improved despite no increase in confidence of the government's handling of the crisis

Likely to be a combination of:

- News on opening up of outdoor attractions (23 May) and subsequent opening in early June & news on zoos
 - Seasonality
-rather than any general improvement in national confidence around the crisis

Q11. Which the following are you intending to do in the next 2 weeks combined with Q12. Given what you know today, when do you anticipate doing the following? Base all

Following the significant dip in attraction visiting confidence after initial lockdown easing, there has been a strong upturn in early June. 10% of the market (c.4m adults) claim to have already visited an attraction

Concern is higher around visiting indoor attractions, so the importance of implementing and communicating safety measures will be even more important for these attractions on re-opening

ALVA

Attractions Recovery Tracker

How currently feeling about visiting attractions when they re-open: spontaneous mentions (%)

Open-air spaces like parks, gardens or castle ruins I'm not too concerned about and would like to go and visit within a month of re-opening. Museums, state houses and cinema I'll be more cautious, and make sure there are clear guidelines on their official website to limit number of visitors, staff are wearing masks/gloves etc before I consider visiting

I think that outdoor venues - gardens, zoos are fine providing social distancing is observed, I think fairground attractions will not be feasible as would indoor venues like stately homes, museums, theatres, etc as control of indoor venues including toilet facilities will be so much more difficult

Comfortable with visiting outdoor attractions but would likely be wary of indoor attractions even with mitigation.

I'm more comfortable visiting outdoor attractions where there's wide open space and it's easier to social distance than attractions which require going inside buildings where you can't control how far you are from other people

Q: Please tell us in your own words how you currently feel about visiting attractions once they re-open to the public. What are your hopes? What are your worries or anxieties?

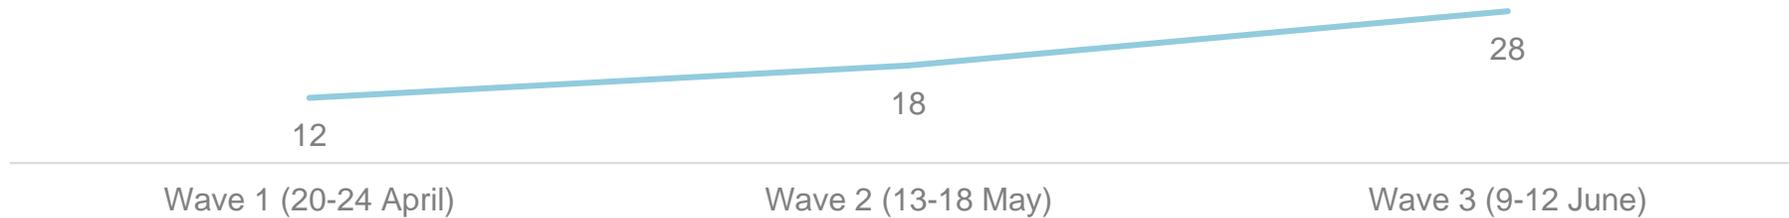

Base: All respondents, Wave 1 (668), Wave 2 (760), Wave 3 (750)

Main barrier to visiting is increasingly around worries about fellow visitors adhering to distancing measures or attractions' ability to enforce these measures

ALVA

Attractions Recovery Tracker

% of the market who spontaneously mention 'social distancing' when asked about visiting attractions

11% mention specific concerns about fellow visitors or ability to enforce distancing (Wave 3)

Obviously of concern is both how the attraction will implement both social distancing measures and cleansing routines also how other people will follow the rules for distancing as currently there is a small part of the population who seem to feel that they are special and consequently don't need to follow the guidelines. It's imperative that the attractions themselves actively police the rules so people feel safe.

Apprehensive, not for the site (I am sure they will take all precautions) but for the people - They're pack idiots.... There will always be a few groups that feel impervious to the issue & disregards anyone's right to their space...

It very much depends on how much control there is & if some behave like selfish morons!! Look at some beaches, Durdle Door, Wareham Forest, The New Forest & many others throughout the country. Until those selfish 'people' learn to behave in a civilised fashion, NORMAL people will suffer & be unable to enjoy all these wonderful places :'(

I feel really anxious about returning. For the most part, I trust the venues as I think that they will have adequate health and safety measures in place, it's the other visitors that I don't trust.

I have concerns that other visitors will not social distance and this will not be enforced at the attractions by staff.

Q: Please tell us in your own words how you currently feel about visiting attractions once they re-open to the public. What are your hopes? What are your worries or anxieties?

Base: All respondents, Wave 3 (750)

As awareness grows, more people are referring to advanced booking as a way of limiting capacity: this indicates 'control' and provides reassurance around crowds, distancing and queuing

ALVA

Attractions Recovery Tracker

Limiting capacity / advanced booking (5%)

I hope they open soon. I would be happy to visit if the number of people being allowed in was controlled, e.g. by ticketing.

In some ways, the situation might make visiting things better for me, as reduced numbers will make the experience less stressful and more fun, however actually getting in at all will be difficult, I expect pre-booking to become common.

I'm hoping to go back to supporting them but I'd expect safe measures to be in place and strict limits on visitor numbers so distancing can be easily practiced.

I hope they can restrict the number of people visiting and continue to social distance people. Also keep updated with hygiene

I'm fine with visiting outdoor attractions as long as numbers are limited and people aren't crammed together. I think I'd avoid indoor attractions for the time being and after that would expect limited numbers and distancing policies

Concern around queuing

Hope that it will be possible and that they won't be too crowded or have long queues to get in. Hopefully many will do as the National Trust intend to do and have pre-booking.

I am not worried about the virus as such, it is the queuing that bothers me the most.

I worry that places will be very busy meaning long queues and people not adhering to social distancing

Won't be much fun, queue times will be twice as long and it'll be a waste of money

Overcrowding

I feel optimistic, however, I feel like the attractions will be packed!

It will be nice for them to reopen...my worries are that they will try to cram too many people in, to recoup some of the money that they will have lost over the past few months

I am going to wait a while before visiting these kind of places as I feel that people will flock to them and social distancing will not be possible

I actually work in one and know it will be ok, but am still concerned about safety if there are too many visitors so won't visit for a while.

There is clear demand for services, especially toilets, to be available on re-opening. Half of the market would not visit an attraction which did not have their toilets open

Wave 3: If these facilities were closed or not available when the attraction re-opened, what would you do? (%)

Q: We would now like you to think about the attractions you typically visit that have these facilities. If these facilities were closed or not available when the attraction re-opened, what would you do?

If viable, clearly it would be beneficial for attractions to make these facilities available with appropriate safety measures or potential visitors will begin to question the value of the experience

ALVA

Attractions Recovery Tracker

Is it worth visiting?

I have no worries. I just want places to open and have access to toilets and a cafe. I cannot stand this part-opening with no added facilities. I like to go out for the day and experience all what an attraction has to offer

I am actually not worried about it . I would hope that the loos would be open otherwise it would be too difficult to visit. I would also like some sort of food and drink to be available.

I am worried about toilet facilities not being open as this would impact me quite seriously.

Looking forward to visiting again but it will not be the same without toilets, restaurant, cafes, shops etc.

I would like the cafes and restaurants to be open presumably with the tables spaced

I would be concerned if there were too many people. I would not go if there were no toilet facilities.

I think if the cafes and restaurants are not open at the attractions then that would make the day not so good.

Will there be proper access to food & drink?
Will there be proper access to toilets and handwashing? If not: what is the point?

Q: Please tell us in your own words how you currently feel about visiting attractions once they re-open to the public. What are your hopes? What are your worries or anxieties?

It is even more important for attractions with an older age profile to try to open these facilities – especially toilets and a catering offer – as soon as possible

The wearing of face masks in the UK has plateaued in recent weeks and is certainly not ingrained within our culture. However, 3% spontaneously referred to face masks when asked about their feelings on visiting attractions

All visitors and staff should wear face masks. My biggest concern is that these sort of basic precautions will not be implemented or enforced. If these sort of sensible rules are not in place whilst the risk of infection is still high then we will not be going.

I would be scared to attend unless everyone wore masks.

Will go as much as I did before, I will wear a face mask and try and keep away from other people as much as I can

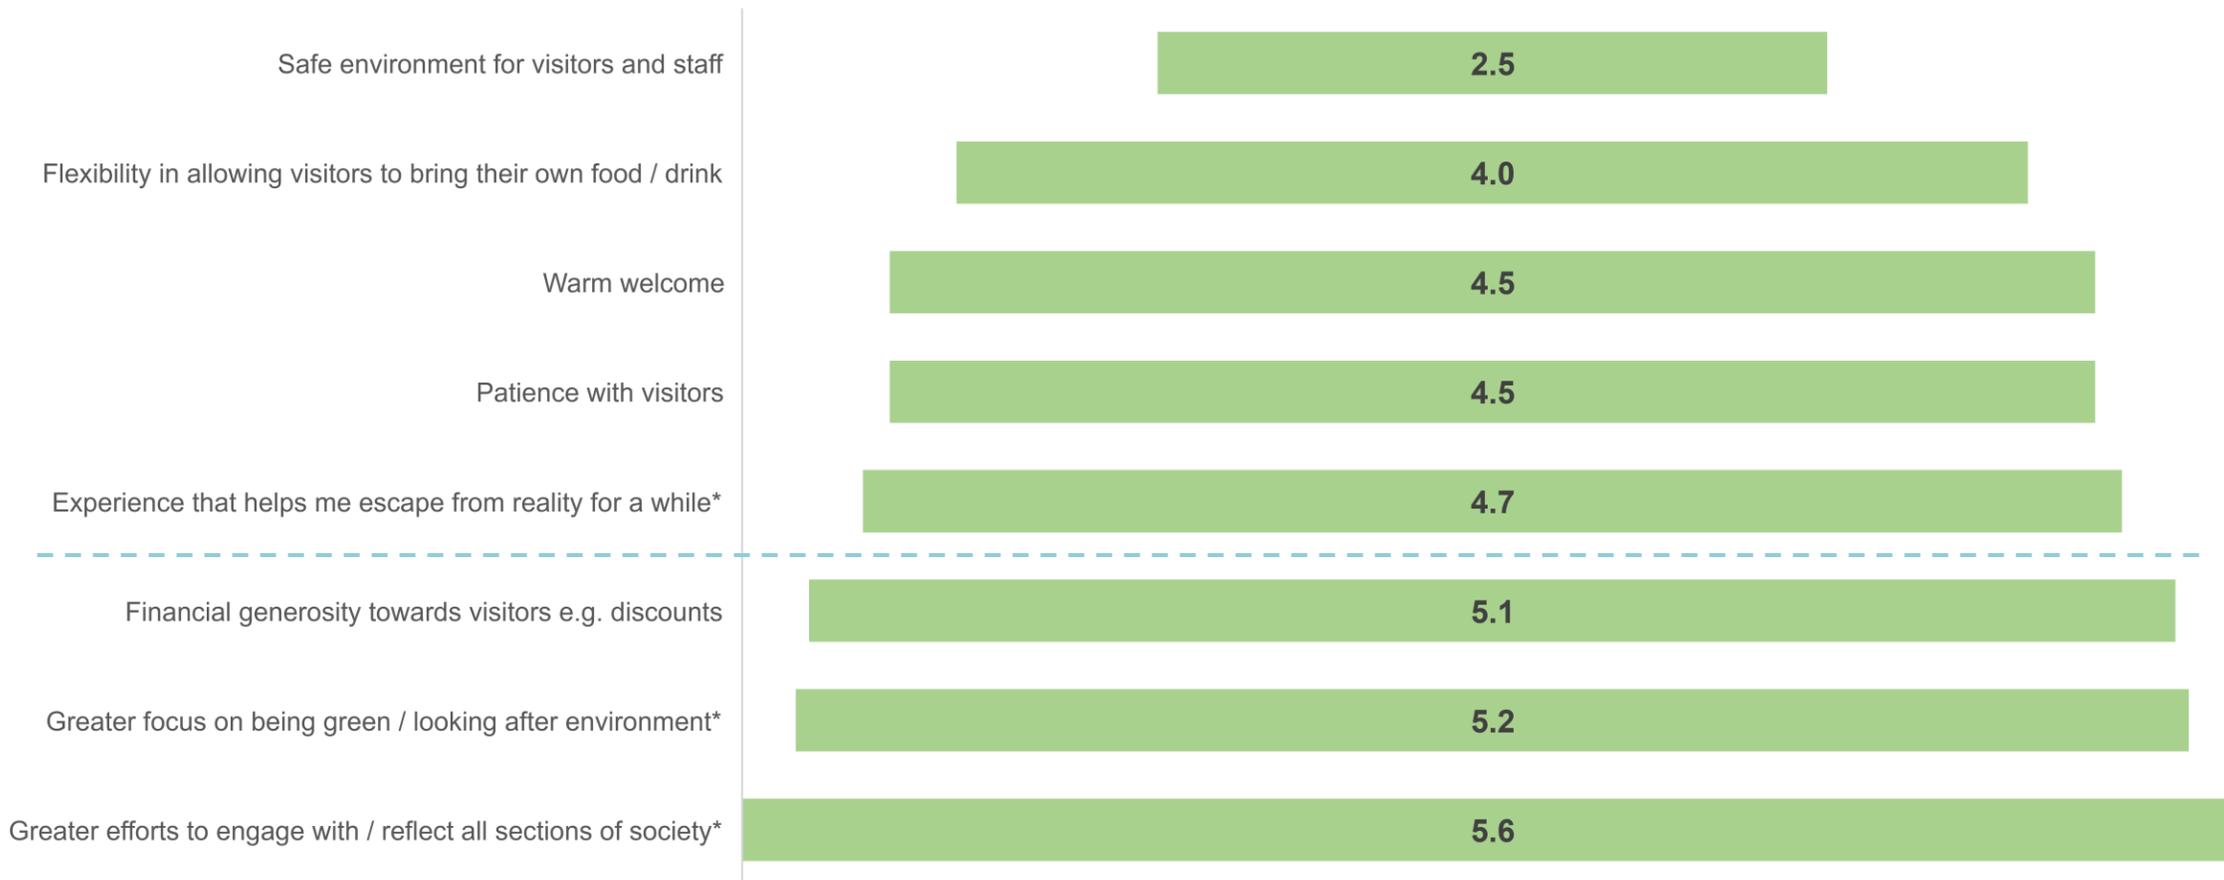

I would wanted limited people in time slots and masks to be compulsory

Visitors are focussed on the short term at present – overwhelmingly about safety, but also about wellbeing. Wider societal issues are for another day in the eyes of visitors

Key take-outs

ALVA

Key take-outs / 1 (Wave 3: 9-12 June)

There has been strong improvement in visit confidence in early June, driven primarily by successful opening of some outdoor attractions and the media coverage around zoos and safari parks

10% of the attractions-visiting market – an estimated 4m adults – have already made a visit after re-opening, mainly to country parks (3.0m) but also to gardens (1.5m). Early returning is.....

-more likely among younger people aged 16-34 years
-not just among those who visit attractions frequently; local people desperate for a 'different' trip out?

However, confidence in visiting indoor attractions has declined since the start of lockdown. The importance of implementing and communicating safety measures in these environments will be even more important when re-opening

The main visit barrier is increasingly around worries about fellow visitors adhering to distancing measures or attractions' ability to enforce these measures. How can we demonstrate and communicate that these are working well in our attractions?

Evidence that the 'advanced booking only' approach is successfully reassuring potential visitors: the limited capacity this implies indicates 'control', providing reassurance on crowds, distancing and queuing

Key take-outs / 2 (Wave 3: 9-12 June)

The lack of a full visitor offer will be a significant visit barrier on re-opening. In the eyes of potential visitors, providing as complete an experience as possible, applying appropriate safety measures, is preferable to keeping elements closed

Toilets are currently in the 'high priority but high anxiety' area for visitors – half will not visit an attraction at all if these are closed, but safety measures are hugely important in building confidence in their use. It's not enough just to open toilets with no safety measures – key for pre-visit communication

Indoor catering outlets and interactive visit elements are the two other visit experience areas generating most anxiety around use. Again, preferable to make available with mitigating measures than keep closed

Anxiety around using facilities at indoor attractions is higher among older people – starting as young as 55. Measures at indoor attractions with older age profiles are even more important to apply and communicate

Visitors are focussed on the short term at present – overwhelmingly about safety, but also about wellbeing. Wider societal issues are for another day in the eyes of visitors

Next steps / 1

Run the research again periodically when we predict that there could be a material change in sentiment:

- 🕒 When more sections of the wider economy open up
- 🕒 When the public has firmer details about the timing of the re-opening of indoor attractions
- 🕒 After re-opening, as the public reacts to the new visiting environment and initial successes or otherwise

Incorporate any new issues as they emerge

Update on ALVA Visitor Recovery Benchmarking initiative

ALVA Visitor Recovery Benchmarking

ALVA

ALVA launching a visitor benchmarking survey at a time when budgets are low and need for insight and access to best practice examples is high.

A reminder:

- 🕒 Visitor tracking survey to understand how your visitors are feeling about new safety measures, staff, impact on visit experience, as well as how visitor profile, motivations and comms triggers have changed in this period
- 🕒 Online post-visit survey sent to visitors
- 🕒 Results via online dashboard on a shared basis
- 🕒 Low cost - £750 per attraction, with large discounts for multiple attractions

This will be going ahead: c.25 attractions committed plus conversations with many more, UK-wide
